The role of cathepsin E in glomerular disease. Cathepsin E (CathE) is a proteolytic enzyme which cleaves collagen and may also participate in the degradation of glomerular basement membrane. CathE is overexpressed in the kidney of rats with experimentally induced hypertension and in patients with the nephrotic syndrome. We have therefore analysed CathE in the urine of patients with various glomerular diseases and in homogenized and cultured kidney specimens from normal and nephrotic rats. Urine samples from patients with membranous nephropathy, mesangial proliferative glomerulonephritis (GN) and glomerulonephritis with pre-formed immune complexes (GN with immune deposits) were analysed using antibody-based enzyme-linked immunosorbent assays, which measure the activation and the concentration of CathE. CathE activity was also detected by thin layer chromatography and immunoblotting in homogenized kidney specimens from normal and nephrotic rats and in cultured human and rat glomerular epithelial cells. CathE was detected in the urine of patients with membranous nephropathy and mesangial proliferative GN. Urine samples from patients with membranous nephropathy and mesangial proliferative GN contained 2-4-fold more Cath 648931e174
